STRATEGY WITH SOUL

STAGE · YOU'RE STARTING OUT

Start with clarity

Your first step when everything is still to be built

Starting from zero isn't weakness. It's the bravest point, because everything is still to be built.

YOUR LIFE IS A PROJECT TOO

Before you run, look at the map

When you start again, the temptation is to do a thousand things at once. But the real first step isn't doing more — it's seeing clearly where you stand. That's the Diagnosis, the first step of my method.

1

Take an honest inventory

Write down what you DO bring: experience, skills, your network, your resources. Nothing is “too little.” What you were worth there, you're worth here too.

2

Name what weighs on you

Without judging yourself, write the fears and blocks you carry. What gets named stops controlling you in silence.

3

Sum up your starting point

Put it in one sentence: “Today I'm here, I have this, and I want to go there.” That sentence is your base.

EXERCISE

The map of your point zero

Take 15 minutes and fill each space. Don't aim for perfect — aim for honest.

What I have

Skills, experience, people, resources...

What weighs on me

Fears, doubts, what holds me back...

Where I want to go

Even if it's still blurry...

Your micro-step today: pick ONE thing from “what I have” and write it as a strength, in a single sentence.

You don't need it all figured out. Just your next step. I'll walk the rest with you.
